SATURDAY, MARCH 8, 1902.

Overtures of the Democrats that the Republicans amalgamate with them reminds one of the needle's eye endeavoring to encompass the camel.

Thurston suggests that "good" men get in and run the machine. "Good" men presumably means Thurston and his men, according to Thurston's interpretation.

The men who made the laws for the "best government on earth" are now attacking the judges because the laws are found to be replete with the errors of carelessness.

That great corporation lawyer, Attorney General Knox, who helped to build up the Steel Trust, is now advising the President to tear down a big railway combination.

Honolulu people will soon learn that the pastime of playing with live wires is not conducive to long life and happiness. Even polo and football are less likely to result disastrously.

Governor Crane of Massachusetts is now spoken of as Secretary of the successor in the President's Cabinet. As Crane was offered the place of Gage, he can put himself down as one of the most sought individuals in the country.

There is one very excellent feature about Delegate Wilcox's bill to increase the salaries of national officials. It will demonstrate to the Delegate and his friends that money is not the first consideration of public officers of the United States.

The national industrial commission holds that corporations should be taxed upon the value of their franchises as determined by the value of their stocks and bonded debts. This has been the aim of Hawaii tax assessors for some time past.

Mr. Haywood's statements before the Ways and Means Committee indicate that he ought to read up on the subject of Chinese immigration if he seeks to properly represent the facts. It is not likely, however, that errors regarding old laws will at this time have any particular effect upon the legislation in connection with Cuba.

Some brilliant newswriter has found that Queen Victoria was responsible for Lord Pauncefote's attitude during the Spanish-American war. This statement is a signal that the discussion has gone far enough. There are men enough living who had to do with the affair without bringing in England's universally honored Queen.

If it be true that the saloon question is square up against Treasurer Wright, the Treasurer to fulfill the requests of the Anti-Saloon League must come out squarely against the policy of the Governor. As the League is made up of many of the Governor's political friends, it now remains to be seen whether these friends have the courage of their convictions.

White House pages and Congressional messengers are now wearing an official button to designate them all, because ignorant persons have mistaken one New York Congressman for a page and other Congressmen for messengers and asked them to run errands. Such reflection on the dignity of national legislators is highly amusing to the other fellow, but very distressing to the victim.

Another mutual insurance company will switch over to a legal reserve concern. This is the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York which is to be reincorporated. It has been in existence for upwards of twenty years and has lasted much longer than many other mutual concerns. Last year, however, some half dozen extra assessments were necessary in order to keep up the death payments, and now we are to have a new "old line" company to be known, probably, as the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company.

Present indications are that the difficulties of the First National Bank stockholders will pass on for the judgment of the courts. It is very unfortunate that members of one of our leading financial institutions should be forced into appeal to the courts to settle differences between individuals, but this seems to be the fractional period of Hawaii's existence and we suppose it must run its course in business and politics. The atmosphere will eventually be clearer when all these thunder-clouds have expended their energies.

PROTECTING THE FLAG.

Agitation of the patriotic societies for the protection of the American flag against misuse that amounts to desecration bids fair to bear fruit at this session of Congress.

Business houses quick to catch up waves of patriotism for advertising purposes carried the flag craze to an extreme which justifies calling a halt. Multiplicity of flags and frequent display of the national emblem is a habit or custom which cannot be practiced too extensively. But when the flag with all it represents is brought into use as an advertising dodge to be kicked about under foot, the educational factor of the flag becomes utterly lost to sight. This is especially true with the youth of the country. When the flag becomes so common that it can be used to exemplify the superiority of hams or the advantages offered by an article of trade, it will steadily be robbed of its true purpose and intent.

To protect the flag as an emblem of the nation's highest aims and aspirations is the highest duty that can be brought home to the people of any country. Those in early life taught to respect our national banner are more certain to uphold in later life all that is good in what the emblem represents. The respect with which the flag is treated evidences the degree of loyalty and pride with which citizens follow its highest teachings.

It is to be regretted that the flag has to be protected by law, but if thoughtless persons see fit to desecrate it, the law to restrain them should be promptly forthcoming.

DISLOYALTY TO THE PARTY.

The endeavors of certain Republicans to whip the special election devil around a stump are interesting only as exhibitions of how little some of our so-called Americans appreciate the province and aims of Republican party principles. It is an expression of the old custom in vogue during Hawaii's independence, when political parties were the creatures of a campaign and had no deeper meaning nor more important purpose than serving as a medium for carrying an election. When new issues arose old parties instead of meeting the issue gave up their existence and the following went in a body to whatever new party best exemplified varying views. This was thoroughly destructive to party loyalty in the American sense and it is against the influence of such education that the old line American parties have now to struggle.

"Good government" in the Territory has come to mean "do-as-I-say government." None other seems good in the esteem of one faction which steadfastly refuses to accept the will of the voters as expressed in the party primaries. But the "do-as-I-say government" cannot win in the long run whatever temporary successes it may secure or whatever party defeats it may assure through rank treachery to the manifest desire of the party's rank and file. Refusal to participate in a party campaign is just as expressive of disloyalty as a straight vote for the opposition. Those who take such an indifferent and treacherous attitude may endeavor to excuse their action, but when slimmered down to facts, they stand as traitors to American party principle.

The Republican party of the Fourth district has a campaign on its hands. The special election can be won if the men who call themselves Republicans, whether members of factions or not, will unite in the support of the party's candidate, or in other words use their vote to preserve party integrity. If this is not done the strongest wing of the party following will be lost for the general election of November. The Hawaiian-Americans and the labor element, while they may not have a majority vote in the Fourth District, at least have the balance of power. If their support is lost, as it will be through failure of the Republicans to make the contest, there is little hope for the party at the general election.

COAL OIL AND "BRIGUETTES"

[New York Commercial.] It seems to be a natural law that, when one source of any supply is exhausted, a new source springs into existence. Nature has already revealed to use one new variety of fuel, which is apparently almost inexhaustible and gives excellent promise of being developed into a better agent than coal for general use. The capacity of coal oil as a heat-producing agent has not been thoroughly tested, but bids fair to become one of the most widely used materials at the service of manufacture.

But while nature is doing great things for us in supplying new fuel for our use, science is also at work on the problem, and her skill in solving it is becoming every day more apparent. A European inventor has just brought to public notice a new "briquette" that he has constructed from peat and lignite. It has a heating capacity equal to that of brown coal. He is a German and, as Germany possesses over 5,000,000 acres of peat beds, it would seem as though the material for the basis of his "briquettes" was practically inexhaustible.

It really looks as if the world may feel quite at ease regarding its prospects for future fuel supplies, with nature and science both working thus in its behalf. Our coal beds may disappear, and our "coal barons" become a legend of the misty past; but our bodies will still be kept warm somehow, and our machinery will still rumble on. After mineral oil and "briquettes" nature or science will give up still another secret.

Bossuet worked in a cold room with his head warmly enveloped.

A PROPOSED NEW COIN.

[Brooklyn Standard-Union.]

There is a proposition before Congress to have a coin of a new denomination added to our list, namely, a 2½ cent piece, of copper, and there are already those who are declaring that it fills—or will fill—a long-felt want, besides conforming to our decimal system.

It is many years since we have had a genuine copper coin—the old cent piece with the Goddess of Liberty thereon. The two-cent piece was not all copper, but copper bronze, like the present one-cent piece, and since the old "red cent" went out of fashion we have had no coin to really justify the phrase "nary red," which at one time was so expressive of total financial incompetence. The three-cent coin has long since followed the copper. The silver coin was one easy to lose and became a nuisance. The two-cent piece, with a little "treatment" of an inexpensive sort, was often palmed off by petty swindlers upon the unwary for a "nickel." It was finally voted a nuisance and withdrawn.

The cry for the proposed 2½ cent piece comes with most force from the South, where once so small a coin would have been scorned. The Atlanta Journal declares it would be used largely, and that there is no reason why should we not have it. It cites the case of school children riding for "half fare." Up here that means three cents, as things are, and the public is the loser. The Journal also says: "The use of one-cent pieces has increased enormously in the last few years and another coin of less than five cents value would be very acceptable," and that it should be coined and circulated without delay. The "copper kings" doubtless will agree to that proposition. But how will it affect the bargain counter and the dollar goods for 98 cents trade?

STILES' NARROW ESCAPE

Edmund Stiles, bookkeeper for Spreckels & Co., had a very narrow escape from death at the home of Governor Clegg, in Alahau, Waikiki, last evening. An electric wire had parted and a lineman was sent out to the place to repair the damage in order that the people of Alahau might not be deprived of light during the evening. Stiles was in the wire, and a crowd that watched the operations of the lineman.

Previous to beginning operations on the wire, which lay among some of the bushes along the driveway, the lineman warned all those present not to touch the wire, as it was live. Stiles, being a little hard of hearing, did not catch the warning of the lineman and, going to the wire, took hold of it just beyond the end. In an instant he was rigid with a tremendous voltage passing through his body. He was absolutely helpless and had it not been for the quick action of the lineman, he would not have lasted much longer.

This worker, seeing the difficulty, quickly pulled the wire out of Mr. Stiles' hands. The latter fell to the ground in a dead faint. The place where the wire had come into contact with his hand was quite badly burned. Stiles was taken into the house, where he was rubbed with alcohol and artificial respiration was set up. A doctor was telephoned for, but before his arrival Stiles was able to sit up and was getting along well. Later in the evening, when the wound was dressed, he was pronounced out of all danger.

DOING GOOD BUSINESS

The well-appointed liquor house of Gomes & McTigue, on King street, which that firm opened up several months ago, is looked upon by the trade as one of the best-arranged, best-stocked and most commodious in the city. For many years both parties in the firm have been in the liquor business in this city. The senior member, Mr. Gomes, was with Camara & Co. for a long time until he bought out the concern and formed the partnership with Com McTigue, who for years was the principal outside man for Macfarlane & Co.

With the many friends of both Messrs. McTigue and Gomes, they think that their patrons are many and growing in numbers. The hard times complained of by many of the tradespeople of Honolulu do not seem to have reached Gomes & McTigue, who cheerfully acknowledge a much larger business at the present time than they have ever done before. The firm is sole agent for many of the celebrated liquors and beers of the world, and they make a specialty of catering to the wants of the best family trade.

THE DIMOND'S COOK.

Editor Evening Bulletin:—How will the Advertiser ever be a paper worth reading when they don't take the time to learn the facts. "Bob" wishes the reporter of the Advertiser to know that the cook of the bark W. H. Dimond did not draw a knife, neither did he have any trouble with anybody on the passage from San Francisco to Honolulu. The cook is a "civilized" negro and besides that, this is not the south where a negro's crime is paid by another.

R. A. MENSON,
Cook bark W. H. Dimond.

There is nothing new in the Kona situation. One of the principal stockholders said today that definite report of action taken here with reference to financing the proposition would surely go forth in the next regular steamer to Kona, the Mauna Loa next Friday.

"So you won't let me play 'Hamlet'!" said Mr. Stormington Barnes. "Emphatically, no," answered the manager. "You have no respect for the character of the great Dane."

"Now, my dear Stormo," was the soothing rejoinder, "what does the public care about great Danes? What they want is the bloodhounds in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'!"
